Carrie Nation, just returned from her European crusade, was a caller at the White House yesterday afternoon.

She did not see the President. Sec Executive was busy. Even the Secret Service men remained oblivious to the presence, near their chief, of the terrible hatchet wielder, who had called primed for a repetition of the stormy session she had held with Secretary Taft, in Cincinnati last summer, previous to his nomination.

Mrs. Nation was in a hurry, and as she rushed up to the main entrance of the White House she accosted the first policeman she met.
"Is the President in?" she asked.
